Americans have had their first opportunity of seeing the new cup challenger, Shamrock III, perform, and the beating which Sir Thomas' latest craft gave the old Shamrock did not give Americans so much assurance of the victory as they had expected. The Shamrock III is undoubtedly a fast yacht, and it will take a good boat to beat her.

Pursuant to early promises the administration of Mayor Burke of Burlington bids fair to be one continuous series of tilts with other officials. Mayor Burke's right to the title of chief contractor for the new Carnegie library was strenuously denied by the library commission of that city, and the library is being erected not according to the ideas of the mayor. Now the deposed chief-of-police seeks to know why the mayor has usurped his power and title and goes to law to find out. The fact that Mayor Burke is a blacksmith is not in the least the cause of his trouble—a blacksmith may be as well fitted for mayor as any one—but the fact that he tried to turn the whole course of events in Burlington and attempted to revolve them about himself has led to his difficulty.

The new license law is certainly having a good trial, and so far, it is disgusting both to the friends and enemies of the law. Instead of being less arrests for drunks, as the law grows older, there are more. If this record keeps up, bar room fixtures in Vermont will sell cheap two years hence.

The above from the Waterbury Record is a generality which requires only a few statistics to prove without foundation. If the new law is receiving a good trial that is certainly all its advocates can ask for as a fair trial will show its merits over the prohibitory law. This is allowing for whatever minor defects that the law may have, and even its advocates are not denying that the instrument, somewhat hastily arranged, has some smaller deficiencies which may easily be remedied at the next opportunity. But as for the statement of the Record that the arrests for intoxication are increasing instead of decreasing, the reports from license as well as no-license towns disprove that.

For instance, in the village of Bennington there was not a single arrest for any criminal cause last week,—a far better record than previously when the number of arrests for intoxication approached a baker's dozen. In Bellows Falls, the Times of that town, an opponent of the license law, is forced to admit from the conditions that exist that "there has been a remarkable decrease in the drunk business." There was only one arrest for intoxication in that town last week. Now turn, for a passing glance, to St. Johnsbury, a no-license town. Thus far during the month of June there has been one solitary arrest for intoxication and that, it is said, was caused by a stranger who came to town and drank too many "bumpers" at a friend's wedding. The record for the month is unparalleled in the history of St. Johnsbury's court. That condition, bear in mind, is in a no-license town, in a community where the prohibition merits of the new law are being given a thorough testing. In the light of such facts, we can scarcely agree with the esteemed Waterbury Record that the law is "disgusting" both to its friends and its enemies.

Bruin made a trip the next night, but becoming frightened at something, disappeared in the darkness before Mr. Curtis could get a shot at him, which he intended to do. Bruin did not come back the third night.

Gilman Emerson, aged seventy-three years, died at his home in West Berlin Friday evening after a long sickness with Bright's disease. He was a farmer by occupation and was well known throughout this section. The deceased is survived by a wife and two daughters, Addie, living at home, and Mrs. Patterson of Chicago. The funeral was held from his late home in West Berlin on Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock, Rev. W. F. Hill officiating. Burial was in the cemetery in West Berlin.
